

HOLES IN MY SHOES

(A NEW HD DOCUMENTARY FEATURE)

Movie Synopsis

A 94-year-old New Yorker, Jack Beers has broken the age barrier full force.

He can do what most young men can (and then some!), and his many diverse lifetime achievements, helping to shape New York City and more, would take many men to accomplish. This is an inspiring, funny and moving film – a true rags to riches story, overcoming adversity.

At 94, Jack is not like any man his age – the film begins with an acknowledgement of Jack from Mayor Bloomberg for his contribution over a century to New York City, then we see Jack's name in lights on the famous marquee of Radio City Music Hall, and next we see Jack, at 94, rip a Greenwich, Connecticut telephone book into 4 pieces with his bare hands – and this is ONLY the beginning.

Jack was raised in severe poverty in the Lower East Side, he became a 'strongman' and was known as "New York City's Strongest Boy".

He helped build Radio City Music Hall, and at The Manhattan Project he invented something that shortened WW2 and saved many lives.

He erected the Empire State Building spire (we see Jack at the top – via helicopter), he was a professional dog trainer, was a film actor in over 200 films, beat terminal illnesses, and, at 94, rides 3 miles per day on a stationary bike, drives, indian wrestles 30 year old men, surfs the net, cuts down trees, mows 5 acres of his lawn on a tractor, and much more.

As a grand finale, the film ends with Jack singing "When You're Smiling" on top of the Empire State Building in true Jack Beers style.

This is a profound, moving, inspiring and richly entertaining story for all ages, and heaven sent during these times.

As Jack says, he's "goin' for 100!"
